The role of the right frontal pole in moral behavior: A study with single photon emission computed tomography. A previous study on the role of the prefrontal cortex (PFC) in moral decision-making suggested that the right lateral prefrontal cortex, which exhibits function differences between a moral and immoral condition, is closely involved in the process of decision-making in the moral domain (Klein et al., 1999a). We performed single photon emission computed tomography (SPECT) studies to further clarify the role of the right lateral PFC in the moral domain. In our experiment, the participants were asked whether their personal moral code included the right of killing self-defense or the right of murder, because their killing of self-defense (a type of aggression) was cruel, and their killing of another person (a type of non-aggression) was a type of murder. The experiment consisted of two conditions: the moral condition in which the participants recognized the right of killing self-defense but not the right of murder as part of their personal moral code (n=12), and the immoral condition in which the participants recognized the right of killing self-defense but not the right of murder
