What's new in Trainz™ Simulator 12:

.8.0 is out now! At the end of July we released a few tweaks to the spectre clearing and trainz mode to get better spectre support. Also we added several other new features in the game. Below we have listed this along with a lot more to find in the release notes. Hope you enjoy it!

Feature tweaks

Visible incident effects on everything that can see it: Spectre ways are now visible in the HUD when spectres are in the vicinity. This makes it easier for viewing waypoints, abandoned trains and train spawn warnings. The idle up, idle down and taxi over texts, if applicable, are now visible. Train times and duty cycles are now shown in the idle up and down texts. A new “Travelling time help” text, while travelling, if applicable is now shown. The names of tracks, services and stations are now visible to trains. They are not visible to players due to a technical reason. When using save/load (save game and load a new one), the current episode is no longer lost. Spectre clearing options have been reworked

Configurable block time: Spectres can be killed after specified number of blocks when a block is red (empty and not hidden), is transparent or has red walls. Spectres can also be cleared when a block is red, but a wall still matches the area (but not the type of block). Press “Clear the nearby blast”. Specified if spectres should automatically select the nearest blast. Characters are now able to remove the fragments of sub-cell walls left by the spectres. Clear the nearby blast can be set to “loosen” instead of “destroy”. If set to loosen, and there are no other controls that can stop all spectres in the vicinity, then the blast will not be powerful enough to kill all spectres at the place. Though only spectres in the impact area will die, and the blast will not do damage to the buildings if not nearby. Block and wall references have been removed from the location operator. To help you select targets, spectres are now shown which are done by further blasts. Spectres can now be cleared for specific characters if the characters are standing in the specified targets. To make changes permanent, the changes in the settings panel are now saved

facilitation/inhibition in the living rat brain. We performed experiments to assess the extent of classical conditioning (CaC) of the conditioned-stimulus facilitation (CoF) of the population spike (PS) in the hippocampal slices of unanaesthetized rats. The slices were prepared from normal adult rats. Two subdivided electrodes and two conditioning electrodes (one an active and the other a reference) were used to simultaneously record the PS, the field-excitatory postsynaptic potential (fEPSP) as the response to conditioning stimuli and a presynaptic unit as the indicator of background transmission. The PS recordings were done with the background synaptic activity blocked by bicuculline, an antagonist of GABA (gamma-aminobutyric acid) receptors. The CaC of the inhibition of the background was facilitated by a conditioning stimulus presented before the background at the conditioning electrode. The facilitation of CaF was also facilitated by the conditioning stimulus. However, the background synaptic facilitation by the conditioning stimulus was not influenced by the background. This phenomenon resulted in the "double-transmission" of the conditioning stimulus, and a paired-
