Few-mode fiber links as a large-capacity multiplexed optical link. We theoretically demonstrate large-capacity few-mode fiber (FMF) based optical links. It is shown that four equal-capacity FMF links can be optically coupled at each end via a multimode fiber (MMF) with a relative bend radius of 75 mm, and that a wavelength-division-multiplexed 40 Gbit/s nonlinear polarization-maintained FMF link, with a transmission distance of 60 km, can be constructed in a single piece of fiber. As a further extension, we consider a link having two 40-Gbit/s nonlinear polarization-maintained FMF links in series and a 3-km long MMF link in between.The rising incidences of reported and confirmed novel coronavirus cases in the United States underscore the need to develop vaccines for the novel coronavirus (2019-nCoV), which causes severe respiratory infection. However, the virus is not easy to transmit, posing the risk of recombination and reemergence. Moreover, there are presently no approved vaccines or drugs for the treatment of 2019-nCoV. There is an urgent need to establish a robust vaccine platform against 2019-nCoV before the virus is introduced into the human population. Coronaviruses possess a unique type of viral RNA-dependent RNA polymerase (RdRP) from the Y-family of the Nidovirales family. The Y-family RdRPs has been classified into six different groups (I-VI) and the RdRP of the newly isolated 2019-nCoV belongs to group II. Y-RdRP is essential for the replication and transcription of viral RNA. 6d1f23a050
