Arkane - a city-state - is locked in a conflict with the otherwise peaceful city Riva. Arkane is almost completely obliterated by the invading army Riva. The surviving Arkaneians flee to Northern Riva to live in an Arkanean quarter and the Children of Linde, a magical cult, grows in strength. Meanwhile, the Children initiate a slave revolt and make a pact with the Trolls. The Arkaneians, now led by William Arkane and the old wizard Fafnir, find no allies in Riva. Finally, they unite with the goblin-like Tiefsflings under Lupo and launch a counteroffensive against the Children. On the other hand, Fafnir has gathered allies, such as the assassin Isenburger and the eccentric battle master Zakora. These three, along with the refugee Quinn and his rescuer, Otto Krebs, form The Black Eye. They want to destroy the Children and their hidden fortress Bygthamar and free Fafnir. However, it will be no easy task. The Children are a diverse group, comprising of even a band of werewolf-like lycanthropes. Riva is under the rule of the Iron Duke, a cruel and merciless ruler, who will stop at nothing to crush the Arkane-rule. Unfinished or incomplete products don't count in this list, but do keep an eye out for a future re-listing of The 100 best roleplaying games of all time. The 100 best roleplaying games of all time: Games that wear a story on their sleeve - On the Spot Games - Tales from the Canvas is a charming co-op board game for 2 to 4 players. Four artists (each representing their own character) discuss the painting next to them. The players, as the spectators, are in the next room. In order to gain access to the next room, they must solve different riddles and untangle the canvas in their exact order. Unlike other co-op games in which the players need to work together, the party of spectators actually counts as a fifth player. This must be taken into account at all times to have the greatest possible synergies. With an underlying story, intuitive mechanics, a great atmosphere and engaging "bat-sheesh" moments, On the Spot Games - Tales from the Canvas is an incredibly well rounded board game. The 100 best roleplaying games of all time: First of all, I have to say a big thanks to

What's new:

The Earth had been long abandoned, the scattered civilizations slowly fading away and the once civilized lands becoming the hotbeds of barbarism. Yes, the entire solar system had been previously colonized, saved by only a lucky few, and only because humanity's ability to survive was just too awesome. The remnants of humanity had given up all hope of ever renewing the solar system, so it could give space to these newfangled aliens instead. As technology increased, so did telepathy. Some scientists had believed that this should be used for something else, and instead had decided to study it. The study had lead to the creation of Nova, an experiment that saw the creation of a dead-easy colonizing system. By plugging their minds into an ever-expanding neural interface, they were able to make this a reality. They referred to this as a "reality field," seeing as they were creating a simulated physical environment. It was actually rather easy, it just took a bit of time. Rapu sat in a chair in the middle of his science lab, tapping on his fingers impatiently as he watched the screen he had set to play a recording. He glanced at the two officers standing beside him, the only other people in the room, and said "Could you just do something about the volume? It's kinda too loud for a science experiment.", his ears twitching as the ship hummed loudly. They glanced at each other before continuing to talk about the maintenance of the propulsion system. At least if it was loud enough, they wouldn't be able to hear the sound of his screaming. The other occupant of the lab, Dashris, looked to them and shrugged in response, turning back to her workstation. The un-offended officers left, but did so leaving the door slightly ajar, making sure Rapu could hear them as they mutinied in conversation. "Nu, maybe when we have more time," one of them said "We really shouldn't be talking about that here." The door slammed shut behind them, and Rapu grinned at Dashris. "We really shouldn't be talking about that here." Dashris snorted in amusement. "Wanna bet?" She said, "Maybe some of those scientist idiots didn't check that the lab has
