The Black Calendar Download With Full Crack is a rather simple tool for looking at the current date and the day of the week. It can be put anywhere on the desktop and provides two different ways for arranging the data. One way uses a small frame on the screen with the month and year, as well as the current day of the week. The second way is a rather elaborate monthly calendar with arrow buttons for browsing. It also includes a color scheme. While the application is quite simple, it is easy to set up. The top half of the gadget's box includes the "Options" button. Here you can customize the frame's frame size. You can adjust its opacity level as well, so the user may enjoy viewing it in several ways. For instance, he may want to see both the day of the week and the year on the frame as well, or just keep it visible while having the rest of the gadget in the background. The lower half of the box features the uninstall button. This is useful if you wish to remove the gadget. The application uses a truly clean and neat interface. The bottom edge of the frame features a "Black Calendar" label. This is where the name of the program will be shown on the user's desktop. Black Calendar manages to provide plenty of value. It requires no installation or runtime files to work, which means that it can be launched with a simple mouse click. It also works in Windows 7 and Windows 8.After overwhelming support for Democrats in the two decades since the 9/11 attacks, I got into a lively debate last night over my column on why voters should switch their party affiliation from Republican to Democrat. (Here's a link to the column.) Two points in the debate stood out: one had to do with a legal misreading of the absentee voting process, and the other with the legality of staying in another party affiliation while you're being active in one party. The misreading concerns the use of a form that's called "Affidavit of Voter's Oath" by the Hennepin County (Minneapolis-St. Paul) election officials. It's supposed to be used by absentee voters who swear or affirm that they are qualified to vote in the election and want to swear or affirm that they are active in the party (or affiliated with the party) of their choice. But, as I explained in my column, you can actually swear or
