Take control of John, a former career criminal with a past of thievery and murder. Upon waking in an unknown hotel, bloodied, injured and having no memory of the last eight years, he struggles to make sense of his own disappearance. Tormenting nightmares and chronic pain overwhelms him, leading him down a path of insanity. You will start with a pistol and will need to work your way up to a machine gun as the game progresses. You will find yourself in a series of situations as you try to figure out the truth behind your disappearance and what happened to the woman you loved so many years ago. Your choices will have consequences and the game will be over if you die. Please note that this is NOT an RPG Maker game, this is a pure role-playing game in the style of 5, 6 or 7. Design: Scenario writing by Forrest L. Ingalls, based on the novel by Scott O'Dell. Audio and Visual Effects by Christopher Black. Original Sound Track by Christopher Black. Storyboards and 2D artwork by me. Models and texturing by Forrest L. Ingalls, based on the original Unreal Engine artworks. Audio by Christopher Black. The art style of the original story "Johnny and the Homewrecker" has been recreated faithfully in this second part of the series for your enjoyment. WARNING: This game is mature, contains adult themes, violence, blood, gore and swearing. It does not contain nudity. In the past few days, John Doe has been changed. His actions are now more evil and his hate for his soon to be ex-wife, Chris, is now a part of his everyday life. Now John is locked in a cage, awaiting the return of Chris and her lawyer, Doug, leaving the future of Johnny and his soul up in the air. Simple yet deep. TouchArcade The game is full of smiley faces and cute saying "like me on Facebook, I am an addict!" but there is a serious aspect to it too. Eurogamer 11.44.2007 Awesome fighting game, and I got it for free! There's no new content, but I'll be playing this for a long, long time. The game was $0.99 last time I checked, but the new update is free. It has become fun as a simple "up and down" game in the same vein as Mario Bros., but the tactical elements are based on physics. You've got weapons, and you use them to defeat your opponents. It's not a "cards on the table" type of thing where you control the table, but your skills and tactics play a part in victory. You control three teams, Yellow, Red, and Blue. Each team has three characters, and the game ends when you beat all of the other teams. I'm playing with the Strike Red team right now, and the Red team is taking a beating right now. Each time you win a match, you get an extra gold card, and you're trying to win that gold card. A bunch of the super characters are available for the Red team, and I'm matched up against one of them right now. It's like the original Red vs. Blue, with a bunch of good ol' cliches being used. I'm playing without the radar, and I'm falling miserably. I really, really hate the radar. It serves no purpose, and it makes it too easy. I'm also using the Exorcist for the first time (he's my special weapon). Sonic (Red) vs. Kikamori (Blue) Eventually I'm supposed to beat the Dark Lord and win the game. I'm having a lot of fun playing, so I really hate when the game ends, and it's time to move on. I'm happy to see they're offering a "pay to win" option. There is a piece of code in the game that allows you to unlock the characters of the new characters. I'm not an idiot, I understand that, but what they didn't realize was that it's really easy to put in the code, and you can unlock the characters, and that's basically all it does. It's a very enjoyable game, and I like that there's gers Recommended Posts Matt Hostetler 0 Matt Hostetler 0 I don't know when I first encountered Cracker. I was probably 10 or 11 maybe 12. It was on the TV show WKRP in Cincinnati. Hearing the show was buried by a loud, ringing intercom clicker announcing every new message on demand. I saw the jumbled, formless telephone cables that wrapped around Dr. Frasier Crane's house like a big snake then saw the distinctive, red shelled Cracker thug, a dopey grin on his wayward face. It blew my adolescent mind. That's me on the right, the young Hostetler. I think Cracker was the best character to teach us about technology. I feel very fortunate to have been able to meet Cracker and talk to him, and I'm sad that I didn't catch that interview on the PA system for a Cracker recap as he was filming it. Anyway, Matt Hostetler here to tell you about that great meeting with Cracker, and why he's so cool... Cracker and Cracker Long before Cracker was a thing, and long before Cracker made that terrible movie, there was a Cracker. A Cracker was a weredog, and Cracker was a weredog. But just as the girl in the movie saw the tax laws as clearing a path, I saw that there was a Cracker whose only job was to deliver Cracker. No wonder so many of us hated Cracker. We were feeding him. Through the internet, Cracker is definitely a presence, especially on the good message boards. But who is he? Dr. Cracker, the genius behind the Cracker, is actually named Jan. He's clearly a fan of classic radio sermons, preaching to us every time we log into iamcracker.com. Cracker's self-introduction "I am Cracker. I came into being at the moment that you were born. I am your personal me. I believe in the power of a dream. I believe that a truly ancient god gave us the iPhone and made the orange food-like cube-beads a bardo - a portal - on the other side. I believe that there is a larger portion of the universe we have yet to discover." "I enjoy reading old books and studying the ancient mysteries. Reading the likes of "W

Pulse Charge: Epilepsy and Photo Sensitivity Warning is a 2D platforming game with an emphasis on speed and exploration. An estimated 1% of population experiences some form of epilepsy. When you tap a tower face is turned white and your health will take a hit. This will deplete over time and the odds of you failing are increasing. Your enemies also take a hit if you defeat them, so be careful on the way down! Pulse Charge utilizes "anti-aliasing" which can cause dizziness, headaches and discomfort in those that have photosensitivity epilepsy or similar conditions. To avoid this, be sure to use PulseCharge on an empty stomach before bed. Link: Steam: PulseCharge by Nighttune Games!
