The name Textbar stands for the feature that lets you automatically show the currently running programs in the bottom of the screen. This function is known to be a part of the keyboard shortcut software, in other words, the tool operates as a standard keyboard utility. The interface of this tool is fairly easy-to-understand, and it isn't complex in any way. Basically, when you run the program, it automatically shows all the processes that are currently running on the computer at the bottom of the desktop screen, which is located below the taskbar. Therefore, you can view the applications that are currently active and use them by switching between their windows with the purpose of getting to a different program. Textbar does not feature any advanced features, and the most important ones such as a floating window or a separate taskbar aren't available either. You are not allowed to customize the panels that display all the running programs or assign them a place on your desktop. As a result, this software is considered to be a lightweight utility that can be used for displaying all the running applications at the bottom of the screen. When selecting a specific program, you can decide whether you want to increase or decrease its size to make it stand out in your desktop.
